PREFACE TO THE REVISED DOVER EDITION

It is almost eighty years since the distinguished music critic of the London Times, John Alexander Fuller Maitland, and his brother-in-law William Barclay Squire, critic, editor and music librarian of the British Museum, published their impressive transcription of The Fitzwilliam Virginal Book. They carried off their difficult task with an astonishing degree of skill and accuracy—a truly monumental accomplishment for the time. Interest in the great corpus of English Renaissance music was just beginning; the science of musicology was in its infancy. Imperus for the project may have come from the pioneering activities of Arnold Dolmetsch, a gifted and dynamic Swiss musician, craftsman and indefatigable researcher in early music, newly established in England, whose followers among distinguished musicians, writers and artists included Fuller Maitland. The latter had evidently become an enthusiastic supporter, and a convert to the harpsichord (even to performing in occasional concerts), perhaps inspired by his first acquaintance with the great body of virginal music in the Fitzwilliam Museum uncovered in the process of preparing that institution’s music catalog, completed in 1887.

With the tremendous upsurge in the performance of Renaissance and Baroque music in the past forty years, and the serious study of early instruments and their literatures, The Fitzwilliam Virginal Book has become recognized as the treasure house of a most sophisticated keyboard music. Highly developed and idiomatic in style, the book is now generally acknowledged to be the foundation for all keyboard music which followed it in the next two centuries. This remarkable collection also serves as an important historical document reflecting the musical life of the time; from this source a large part of English music in many of its facets and forms (including that of the theater) from the 1560s to 1620 could be reconstructed.

Although the Maitland–Squire text has long been accepted as a faithful translation into modern notation (two reprints of the original edition have appeared in the last twenty or more years), a growing number of active performers and scholars have felt that the correction of obvious errors, oversights and misprints (perhaps due to insufficient proofreading) would make it ever more useful. Such lapses were, of course, inevitable considering the enormity and complexity of the publication. However, it was only after a thoroughgoing critical reexamination of the entire collection was undertaken by the present Editor, with a copy of the original manuscript and a pair of virginals at hand, that the full extent and nature of these corrections was realized. There were not only innumerable "lapses," but a considerable number of misreadings and misinterpretations of the manuscript previously unsuspected. Nevertheless a completely new publication was not warranted; needed revision could be successfully accomplished by incorporating the corrections into the existing volumes without altering the basic text, editorial policy or printing style, an operation fortunately made possible by the economical procedures of modern photolithography.

Corrections and changes in this revised edition stem from errors which fall into three categories: those originating with the scribe, those of the printer, and editorial errors in transcription. In the first category we find: (a) placement of notes on wrong lines or spaces (a mistake easily made on a six-line staff); wrong placement or omission of clefs and clef changes, or places where these were written so small as to be missed even by the magnifying glass, causing several passages to be transcribed a third too high, too low or in the wrong range (see for example, Volume I, page 66, line 5, measure 2; page 190, line 4, measure 3; Volume II, page 244, line 3, measure 2); (b) many rhythmic and chromatic ambiguities caused by crowding within the measure; omission of dots, stems, tails; uncompleted melodic lines (Volume II, page 39, line 3, measure 1); some illegibility due to age or smudging; and the very nature of the notation itself (see the Introduction, Volume I, pages XI and XII). Printer’s errors include occasional omission of, or wrongly placed, modern clefs, fingering, accidentals, stemming, beaming, dots, rests, a few ornaments, some poor alignments, uncompleted melodic lines (sometimes even within a cantus—Volume I, page 181, line 3, measure 1).

In a number of cases of editorial misreadings or misinterpretations of notes, rhythms in the manuscript demanded major reconstruction (one or two measures in each instance). The more important of these are: Volume I—page 4, line 5, measure 2; page 20, line 2, measure 4; page 130, line 5, measure 3; page 142, line 2, measure 3; page 171, line 5, measures 2, 3; Volume II—page 23, line 5, measure 1; page 93, line 5, measure 2, line 6, measure 1; page 99, line 3, measure 3; page 265, line 2, measure 1; page 340, line 5, measure 4, line 6, measure 1.

In addition to restoring the many omitted notes (chord tones, melodic lines), chords, accidentals, rests, and the supplying of editorial brackets and correcting of a few misplaced fingerings, the present Editor has also righted a number of musical decisions (some of them untenable in the light of present-day knowledge) and has clarified occasional confusion among rests, inkblots and directs. Indications for triplets and sextolets have been reduced to a minimum for ease of reading, their slurs removed, except when necessary for clarity. Numerals indicating voice entrances in several of the five Ut, re, mi pieces have been reduced in size for the sake of consistency and to avoid mistaking them for fingering or numbering of strains. All editorial additions and corrections, except for restoration of what was originally in the manuscript, are bracketed or have footnotes. To preserve the modality of the time, some editorial accidentals have been eliminated and others suggested in parentheses.

Unnecessary footnotes have been emended. In a few places, due to lacunae or illegibility of the manuscript, the missing material has been supplied by collation with other manuscripts and is so indicated in footnotes. All fingering is original, a fact only hinted at in the Introduction.

As for the manuscript’s elaborate double bars, the original editors recognized their probable decorative function (see the Introduction, Volume I, pages XVI and XVII), but unfortunately decided to include them as repeat signs. They are obviously redundant in the strain and variation form (also traditional in the solo lute and consort music of the time), and have been eliminated throughout except in the short bipartite dances and character pieces without variation, where repeats seem to be called for. In the latter cases, the player may improvise his own simple embellishments. Due to the problem of limited space, first and second endings may not always make mathematical sense when an upbeat is involved; but the player can easily make the necessary adjustment. Final breve chords have been retained, since they are more often than not a part of the structural rhythmic pulse.

With reference to the Tregian family connection elaborated on in the Introduction (see pp. VI–IX), the Editor would like to call attention to the most recent findings as published in Music and Letters: Cole, Elizabeth, “In Search of Francis Tregian” (Music and Letters, XXXIII, 1952, p. 28); Schofield, B. and Dart, T., “Tregian’s Anthology” (Music and Letters, XXXII, 1951, pp. 205–16).

The critical note to page 373 in Volume I, page XXVI, referring to the Toccata of Giovanni Picchi, “This absurd piece of music, by an Italian composer otherwise unknown . . .” should be amended. Picchi (fl. early 17th century) is known to have been organist at the Chiesa Della Casa Grande in Venice. The Toccata which represents him in this collection, although not one of his great pieces, is obviously modeled after those of Girolamo Frescobaldi (1583–1643) with whom he probably studied. Picchi’s very fine set of twelve dances for keyboard, the Intavolatura d’Arpico (Venice, 1620), includes a Passo mezzo Anico and its Sallarello, a Polacchca, two Hungarian dances and a German Todesca. He also wrote vocal music, both sacred and secular, and three Sonatas for violins and wind instruments.

NOTES* TO VOLUME II.

P. 1. See note to vol. i. p. 127. A copy of this setting, entitled “Felix munquam”, is in Forster, p. 24, with no composer’s name to it; and another is in Cosyns, p. 150.

P. 12. The exercise marked CXI, has neither clefs, time-signature, nor indications as to key. The notes have no tails. No. CXII has nothing in common with “Tell mee, Daphne”, on p. 446 of this volume.
P. 22. In Ward’s List.
P. 23. The abbreviation “Dor.”, cannot refer to the Dorian mode, as this prelude is in the transposed Ionian mode (XIII*). See note on vol. i, pp. 129 and 177. This prelude can hardly be connected with the pavane and galliard, nos. XXXIV and XLVIII, as the mode is altogether different.

P. 34. This extraordinary experiment in rhythm is marked only with the barred semicircle, and the arrangement of bars is as indicated by the continuous lines: the dotted lines are supplied until the bottom line of p. 35, when the arrangement of the MS. is followed, marking off, as it were, a little bar of 3-4 time from the larger bar of 8-4 time. Later on, from p. 37, line 3 onwards, the larger bar is divided into two halves of common time, an arrangement which holds good until p. 39, when each of the crotchets is divided into three quavers. It is worth noticing how truly the rhythm is kept throughout the piece.

P. 42. The theme of this piece is the famous “Lachrymae” of John Dowland, (Second Booke of Songs or Ayres, 1600); it next appears in “Lachrymae, or Seven Teares, figured in seven passionate Pavans, set forth for the lute, viols, or violins, in five parts”, in 1605. The first of the seven is the work which is constantly alluded to as “Lachrymae”. Add. MS. 31,392 fol. 35 b has Dowland’s “Lachrymae” in lute tablature. The tune is to be found in nearly every Elizabethan collection. It occurs at fol. 714 of Add. MS. 39,485, and a setting by Cosyns is in his book, p. 8. See Chappell, p. 92. A setting by Morley is in this volume, p. 173, and one by Giles Farnaby at p. 472.

P. 47. The piece occurs as “Hardings Galliard”, without Byrd’s name, in Forster, p. 380. Two “fancies” by James Harding are in Add. MS. 39,485, f. 47 and 50.

P. 54. Some marginal notes on p. 226 of the MS. possibly referring to section 3 of this piece, have been rendered illegible by the binder.

P. 64. In Ward’s list.

P. 67. A copy is in Nevell, fol. 113 a.

P. 77. The same tune set by Monday, occurs in vol. i. p. 66. See Chappell, p. 233. In Add. MS. 23,623 fol. 13 b, it is given as “Bonniwell Robin van Doct. Jan Bull”.

P. 87. See foot-notes at the end of the piece; the last ten bars are evidently meant to be played at librum, as some of them contain five crotchets, others six, and the majority four. The work is an interesting example of a ground kept nearly always in the highest part, and beginning with a simple statement of the theme with a pause marked after it.

P. 94. A different setting from the anonymous treatment of the same tune, vol. i. p. 72.

P. 103. A copy of this setting is in Forster, p. 288. See vol. i. p. 99 ff., which has been used in correcting the corrupt bars noted on pp. 104 and 106. These stand in the MS. thus:
P. 104. sect. 2. bars 6,7:

P. 106. Sect. 4 bars 7 and 8 right hand:

See vol. i. p. 99 ff.
P. 110. The foot-note [] refers only to the left-hand part of the penultimate bar.
P. 111. A copy is in Forster, p. 302.
P. 110. Line three in the last group of semiquavers in the left hand, the C should be marked natural.
P. 121. In Ward's list.
P. 125. In Ward's list.
P. 128. In Ward's list. The piece occurs also as "Corante Juweel", with slight differences in Add. MS. 23,623, fol. 70 b, where there is besides another setting, (at fol. 49 b) entitled "Het Juweel van Doctor Jan Bull quondam anno 1621, 12 December." A slightly different version occurs in Cosyns, p. 124.
P. 135. The composer was probably either Robert Parsons (d. 1570) or his son John (d. 1623). The only entry is the name "Persons" at the end of the piece.
P. 138. The figure after the title, here given as "2", should be "11" as marking the eleventh of Farnaby's pieces in the collection. See Chappell, p. 796.
P. 146. In Ward's list.
P. 148. Bull's setting of this beautiful tune is in Add. MS. 23,623 fol. 17 b, where it is called "Rose a solis van Joan Bull Doct.

P. 161. The theme of this piece became popular later as a catch, "Slaves to the world", which is ascribed to Edmund Nelham in the second edition of Hilton's 'Catch that Catch can' (1658).
P. 166. See Chappell, p. 74.
P. 173. This is another setting of Dowland's "Lachrymæ", though there is no acknowledgment of the fact in the MS. See note to p. 42.
P. 180. This piece occurs under the name "Levalto" in Forster, p. 20.
P. 184. See Chappell, p. 86.
P. 186. See Chappell, p. 796. The tune, the Irish origin of which is denoted by its name "Collene oge assthore" is referred to by Shakespeare, Henry V., IV. iv. 4. See also the New English Dictionary, s. v. CALINO. Another copy is in Add. MS. 30,485, fol. 56 b.
P. 190. See Chappell, pp. 114 and 770. The piece occurs under the name "Lord Willobbies welcome home", in Nevell, fol. 146 b, and Forster, p. 22. Against the bass line at the beginning is written in the margin "300* to S. T. by Tom".
P. 192. Another setting of this tune is at p. 462 of this volume.
P. 234. See Chappell, pp. 123, and 771. Another copy is in Cosyns, p. 46, where it is signed with its initials.
P. 242. In Ward's list.
P. 244. In Ward's list.
P. 248. The significance of the initial D cannot be shown; it can have nothing to do with the mode or key of the piece. In Ward's list.
P. 243. In Ward's list.
P. 251. In Ward's list.
P. 258. It is practically certain that the "W. B." of "Sr. John Grayes Galiard" is William Byrd. The initials are placed at a sufficient distance apart in the MS. for the name to be added in full, and a similar contraction occurs in other MSS.
P. 259. In Ward's list.
P. 260. No. CXIII, occurs again, as a "Corranto" at p. 267, No. CCIV. The harmonies are a little less meagre in this version; the only important difference is in line 2, bar 2, left hand. which stands a fifth higher in the other version.
P. 267. See previous note.
P. 268. The melody of the "Daunce" is that given as "Dulcinea" in Giles Earle's Song Book, 1626; see Wooldridge's edition of Chappell's "Old English Popular Music" vol. i. p. 160.
P. 270. In the margin are some words which Chappell reads as "R. Rysd. silhouette."
P. 273. The facsimile frontispiece to this volume contains the passagge from line 3, bar 3 of this page, to the end of no. CCXII, on p. 276.
P. 274. In Ward's list.
P. 275. See Chappell, p. 76.
P. 278. In Ward's list, where it is called "Fantasia with 23 Variations upon Ut, re, mi, fa, sol, fa".
P. 278. See Chappell, pp. 171, 772.
P. 305. The name at the end of this corronto appears as "William Byrd, sett." but no other composer's name appears to indicate whether the transcription or the theme is assigned to Byrd. The theme is clearly an adaptation of the pavan "Belle qui tiens ma vie", which appears in Thoinot Arbeau's "Orchesographic" (1588) and in many modern collections.
P. 320. See Chappell, pp. 196, 773.
P. 402. This composition occurs, as "The Marche before the Batell" in Nevell, fol. 13 b.
P. 466. In the margin is written "Vide P. Philippi sopra la medesima fuga, p. 158". This refers to the fact that Peter Philips's Fantasia, no. LXXXIV (vol. i. p. 335) is built upon the same subject. Against the third line is written a sentence of which only these words can be read: "la fuga . . . fuggira". This corresponds to the bottom of p. 406 of this volume, and, taken in connection with the fact that the numbers relating to the fugal entries stop at this point, it may be assumed that the sentence drew attention to the free construction of the fantasia from this point onwards, when new "points" or "fugues" are introduced.

P. 412. In Ward's list. "Brunswick's Toy", in Cosyns, p. 114 b, has nothing in common with them.

P. 427. The ornaments of this piece, and the slight alterations of the notes, make the canon not quite clear. It is between the two highest parts, and is at the interval of a fifth below, at the distance of two semibreves. This arrangement of the parts continues strictly to within nine bars of the end, and beside the parts in canon, there are many points of imitation.

P. 430. Another setting by Byrd, of the tune known also as "The Hunt's Up". See vol. i, p. 218. See Chappell, p. 196, and for another copy, Nevell, fol. 46.

P. 442. In Ward's list.

P. 446. See Chappell, p. 158.

P. 445. Line 2, bar 1, left hand, the last note has in the MS. been corrected from A, in order to avoid making octaves with the plain-song.

P. 450. Philip Rosseter published a volume of "Ayres" in 1601 and another of "Consort Lessons" in 1609.

P. 459 bottom line. In the MS. opposite this passage is written, "Vedi Mor. 287". This refers to a curious piece of plagiarism, section 3 of Morley's pavan (vol. i, p. 212), being nearly identical with Farnaby's third section.

P. 462. See note on p. 192. A setting of this tune, signed "B. C." is in Cosyns, p. 59, and another, by John Bull, is in Add. MS. 30,485, fol. 95 b.

P. 472. See note on p. 42, ante.

P. 481. An anonymous setting of this tune is in vol. i, p. 74.

P. 485. Line 2. At the double bar, which comes at the bottom of p. 411 of the MS., appears the direction "Verte".

P. 489. The curious combination of two rhythms is carried on until line 5 of p. 491. It is evident that the notes of the canto fermo are of equal value, in other words that each bar is of the same duration. In playing the piece it would be incorrect to give the crotchets the same value throughout, and in the MS. the semibreves are never dotted, being divided into six or four crotchets indiscriminately.

P. 492, bottom line. The five bars comprising this line are misplaced in the MS., and their order is corrected by means of the figures "1, 3, 4, 2, 5", under the bars as they stand written, indicating the order as given here.

P. 494. See Chappell, p. 23.
